

During the Fifth Night of Ramadan, Sayyid Ammar Al Hakim Says Religion and Society are Interrelated and Complementary

Sayyid Ammar Al Hakim affirmed that religion and society are interrelated and complementary, indicating that religious laws or religious governance generates a psychological motive along with other personal motives in humans. This emotional interaction creates a human who is religiously committed but only for the purpose of getting closer to Allah not of being seen by others.

This came during the fifth night of Ramadan held at his eminence's office in Baghdad on June 25, 2015.
