Concerning Iraqi security situation, Sayyid Ammar al-Hakim said that ISIS organization is in its last throes, adding that it is an ended project that some people have wagered on. He also called to be alert to a post-ISIS phase, to invest the victories achieved in making the country connected, and to advance the societal reality that has greatly witnessed disorder.

With regard to the conditions of displaced people, Sayyid Ammar al-Hakim affirmed that the file of displaced people is the most one among other files that puts pressure on the political forces to get out of the current crisis, to reconstruct the cities, and to agree on a comprehensive vision within a historic compromise needed by everyone. Moreover, he placed the responsibility of reducing the burden of displacement, especially in winter and in the bitter cold, on all political, religious, tribal, and societal leaders.
