

Sayed al-Hakeem: the Islamic awakening is a growing and effective fact in the field and its effects on the reality of Muslim peoples are clear

September 2011, Sayeed Amar al-Hakeem the head of the Islamic Supreme Council of Iraq, assured during the first Islamic awakening conference in Tehran, that terrorism is the greatest danger today to the Islamic awakenings around the world, indicating that the Islamic awakening has become a growing and active fact in our life which affects the reality of the Muslim nations and the international relations, as it is no longer just appeals, wishes, or logos.

Al-Hakeem warned

during the conference which is attended by about 1000 Islamic thinker from 80 countries of the world, warned from mixing papers referring to the need of identifying what is inside or outside of this awakening.

The head of the Islamic Supreme Council, added "today we find a significant decline in the political, cultural and social groups affected by the western thoughts and far away from Islam, which was able during the previous period to control the factors that influence in the social life in general, and power in particular, concluding that there are successes achieved by the Islamic awakening project because of the close concern of Allah and the projects' hard workers.

Al-Hakeem stressed that there are challenges facing the Islamic awakening in the future, which carries the major historical changes, calling to prepare for facing and dealing with matters from the insight and the complete readiness and knowing the role of the Islamic awakening from these changes. Indicating that the success of the Islamic Awakening won't be occurred only by the true intentions, good hopes to return for Islam, being free from underdevelopment and dependency, but by preparing a clearly defined project built on the basis of flexibility in application according to the objective circumstances of each country and the general framework that brings the Muslim world in his goals, aspirations and rights of its people together.

Al-Hakeem suggested to turn the awakening conference, to a permanent conference and to organize its permanent general secretariat working on formation of specialized committees of experts and specialists from different regions of the world taking care of the study of these frames and developing appropriate perceptions, studying, analyzing, monitoring and updating the attitudes towards them and delivering them to the next conferences, as well as assessing the level of awakening success in the Muslim world and its commitment to the original contexts of the project.

Sayeed Al-Hakeem added

“the Palestinian issue and the challenges that faces Palestine to prove its Islamic and Arabic identity, needs from everyone to focus on providing full support and solidarity for the Palestinian issue and the Islamic awakening in the Muslim world and all forms of legitimate resistance that help proving the rights
