His Eminence said that reform projects need convinced bearers to be able to convince people of them. They are often strange and subject to misinformation and misrepresentation, but soon their righteousness and the righteousness of their goals become clear.

His Eminence called to spread the language of optimism, and focusing on the positives, and leaving the language of complaining. Noting that solutions need initiators who can put forward initiatives and change their thinking patterns.

His Eminence explained the importance of solutions being born based on reality and challenges. It is not possible to talk about the end of quotas unless we can form a cross-component alliance and nominate qualified people based on variety, and if we have variety, we have diversity.
