

Stressing the Importance of not to Treat the Partners as They Were Traitors or Try to Destroy Them, Sayyid Ammar al-Hakim Says the Political Crises Must Be Addressed through Ethical Reforms

Sayyid Ammar al-Hakim said it is important not to try to destroy the partners of the political process taking place in the country or call their loyalty into question, stressing the need to carry out ethical reforms, to do justice to the others and not to expect from the others to achieve what we cannot ourselves achieve, and what we are unwilling or don't accept to do.

This came during the tenth Ramadan evening gathering held at his Eminence's office in Baghdad on Tuesday, July 8, 2014. His Eminence called for not misusing the positions and offices to attack the citizens and violate their rights, stating that such positions and offices are for the public service and intended to organize the life's affairs. He also warned against indulging in the positions given the impact and influence this has on the behaviors and the characters, and recommended that we deal with the others with great care. Concerning the displaced situation in the country, the head of the Islamic Supreme Council called to alleviate the suffering the displaced scattered all over the country and living under hard weather conditions. He explained that few aids may have the big influence, if each one contributes with the little they have to reduce the consequences, the difficulties and the diseases suffered by those citizens who left their homes, stores and lands.
